MALAYBALAY CITY, Basilan (Pia) – Of the country's 114 cities, Malaybalay is among the top five awardees in the prestigious 2012 National Literacy Awards for outstanding implementation and sustainability of its Alternative Learning System (ALS) program and community-based monitoring system and MANAGGING.

Mayor Ignacio Zapan said the city made it after meeting the criteria set by the Literacy Coordinating Council, which the judging standards include planning, management, leadership, policies, implementation of programs and projects conducive to literacy development that made positive impact on the people's quality of life.

"This award serves as an inspiration for us to continue our mission in helping our brothers and sisters regardless of the remote villages where there is hunger for education," the mayor said.

The ALS is a free education program implemented by the Department of Education (DepEd), which benefits those who cannot attend formal schooling and follows whatever is their available schedule. The program provides a viable alternative to the existing formal education instruction, covering both the non-formal and informal sources of knowledge and skills.

The Literacy Program of Malaybalay is a regular program implemented through its Local Literacy Coordinating Councils created by the Local Chief Executive in coordination with the DepEd.

The program covers not only women and out-of-school youth. It also addresses the concerns of the family members, sponsoring education to children and providing livelihood to parents, including other members of the family with integration of moral values in all the different activities.
